Q: Store variables that you want to reuse in python-dictionary How can i store variables that i want to reuse in python-dictionary? So that i dont have to always declare the variable again? A: There are a couple of ways I could imagine doing this, I'll list them and try to explain them in more detail later. Use a namedtuple. PyParsing uses this, for example, to define a bunch of symbols and are extremely handy. Use an OrderedDict (note that this is not guaranteed to be maintained order). I would not recommend the first option, as you don't have control over what attributes will be defined. The second option is the way you should define a class and ensure they are stored in the
